The First Alberta Two-Cylinder Club "will become affiliated" with the Didsbury Agricultural Society "because the society has bent over backwards to make us feel welcome," said club chairman Ken Hebert July 27.

At the ag society's Tractor Olympics July 24, the various pieces of farm equipment used in the events were festooned with the Two-Cylinder Club's canvas, green-lettered banners.

The banners were so prominent that they effaced the Didsbury Agricultural Society's role as host of the event.

"We displayed the signs in hopes that the club would get the message we want them to stay here without us twisting arms," said ag society tractor guru Clifford Scott in an interview July 27.

"The Didsbury ag society has offered the Two-Cylinder Club a nice spot for its events with camping facilities," he said.

As well as camper parking, the tractor event area has temporary bleachers, a public address system to accommodate MCs and an area for catering trucks that are present at all ag society grounds events.

The competition area has been scraped down to the soil and is weeded and kept clear of encroaching grass.

On June 11 and 12 the Two-Cylinder Club held its annual tractor pull on the ag society grounds.

"From now on we will stay here permanently," Hebert said.

The Two-Cylinder Club stages competitions such as tractor pulls and plowing matches, and demonstrations such as harvesters.

"We are trying to preserve the old ways of farming," said Hebert.

The Two-Cylinder Club's volunteer manpower is sometimes thin, but people appreciate demonstrations and events that celebrate farming's past, he said.

People who worked at the John Deere dealership in Olds founded the club, Scott said.

It has moved several times in recent years looking for a satisfactory home, a search that until now has been elusive.

Its first events were at the Olds ag society grounds, now called Olds Regional Exhibition grounds. Then it moved to Rosehill Auction Market, then to Olds College.

Hebert and Scott have worked as informal partners to provide the leadership and the grunt work that ensures two-cylinder tractor events and competitions remain a prominent part of Mountain View County's summer calendar.

Budget process starts for 2017-18

Didsbury has started the budget process that ends Dec. 13 when council is scheduled to approve capital and operating expenditures for 2017-18.

The cycle started July 25 when managers received departmental year to date expenditures.

Council will meet in a workshop Sept. 6 and 7 to review a first draft followed by a town management workshop Sept. 8 and 9.

Tax rates will be calculated for a consolidated draft by Oct. 3, which is also the deadline for managers to propose capital spending.

Internal work on revisions will result in a budget and tax changes to be ready Oct. 24 and given to council members Nov. 8.

The formal presentation of the capital budget to council takes place Nov. 15.

The public review of the first draft of the budget is Nov. 18.

A special council meeting, if needed, will be held Nov. 22, and a final public budget will then be created.

Council is scheduled to ratify the budget on Dec. 13.

Chalk art workshop planned

With 14 confirmed corporate sponsors for its downtown sidewalk chalk art event at the coming Mountain View Arts Festival in September, the Arts Festival Society will hold a teaching seminar for the artists Aug 14.

Chalk arts organizer Laura Turner said July 29 that chalker Ian Morris from Victoria, a marquee attraction at chalk arts festivals across the country, will do a workshop so that local talent can learn about the medium.

The workshop will be held Sunday evening August 14 at 7:30 p.m. On Monday morning Morris and workshop participants will practice their art on Didsbury's sidewalks.

More information is available from Turner at chalkart@mountainviewarts-festival.ca.

Council approves boulevard garden rules

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

Town council has given green thumbs up to boulevard gardens, revising the Community Standards Bylaw to allow gardeners to grow flowers between the sidewalk and street adjacent to their property.

Council passed three quick readings to the bylaw revisions July 26 after hearing that town staff researched the practice in other Canadian municipalities.

"Although not many municipalities allow the practice, those that have similar regulations," Christofer Atchison, manager of legislative and development services said in a report.

Council and town staff will keep a close eye on the innovation.

This is a pilot. Council believes it will work, but made it clear during discussion that they can pull back from it.

Under rules stipulated in the new bylaw governing boulevards and alleys, gardeners can grow plants and flowers that are less than 0.8 metres (2.5 feet) tall on corner lots and one metre, (three feet) on other lots - to ensure the gardens do not affect the safety of sightlines.

A setback of one foot for plants must be maintained from the sidewalk and street.

Fruits and vegetables are prohibited.

The plots are to be kept free of noxious weeds.

The gardens must be within the gardener's property line and underground services such as gas, cable, phone and water must be located and protected.

Existing trees cannot be harmed.

Renters must have the owner's permission to have a boulevard garden.

And the garden must be maintained to the satisfaction of the town or the town can restore the boulevard at the expense of the homeowner.

PROTECTING ALBERTANS AGAINST UNFAIR POWER BILLS

The Government of Alberta is going to court to protect Albertans from being forced to pay for the business losses of five power companies.

The companies are trying to offload their losses onto Albertans because of a deal made between the former government and Enron, a discredited and now-bankrupt U.S. electricity operator.

Albertans shouldn't have to pay for the losses of electricity companies.

This 'Enron clause' was never raised during months of public hearings that were supposed to ensure Albertans got a fair deal as their electricity system was deregulated.

And, there is evidence the Enron clause was enacted unlawfully by the previous government and then deliberately withheld from the public.

The Government is asking the court to overturn the Enron clause and protect Albertans against an estimated $2 billion in business losses over the next four years.

If successful, any additional electricity fees charged to the public due to the Enron clause will be refunded back to Albertans.

Albertans shouldn't be on the hook for a backroom deal that allows companies to collect the profits when power prices are high and hand consumers the losses when prices are low.

That's why the Government of Alberta is taking legal action - to protect Albertans.

Heritage Crossing weeds a public issue

Every year since 2009 we have had a situation where the Heritage Crossing site is overrun by weeds.

Calls have to be made to the town to have the owner get rid of them. Every year after the weeds have gone to seed, the owner sends someone in to spray with chemicals. Next year the cycle starts all over again.

On June 8 I respectfully asked the town to have the owner clean up the Heritage Crossing site. I was also made aware the town had a previous meeting with another resident about this problem as well.

The town official's reply was: "I will discuss with the owner."

It is now two months later and here is what the discussions led to. It is not only the weeds, but people are tossing cans and other garbage into the site, which by the way is in a designated residential Central Core Heritage Plan.

I find it very interesting that the town is really excited about Communities in Bloom, which I think is a great idea. In case you have forgotten, here is a little excerpt from the town's press release back in May. "Some suggestions for improving the overall beauty of Didsbury could include: fall planting of perennials; tidying up yards; pruning of trees; and an overall upkeep of properties."

You can plant all the flowers, clean up all the yards, but as long as this situation persists, it is going to be the first thing people notice. Believe me when I say everyone who I talk to is absolutely disgusted by the condition of this property.

I think almost two months is more than enough time for this to be properly cleaned up according to the guidelines in the bylaw.

I understand that there has been no request from the owner for a new permit, so that cannot be an excuse.

I addressed the council last spring about this issue and lost taxes resulting from not building. It seems to me that every time the town is asked about this issue, the developer comes up with another excuse or tries to convince the town that he is going to do something different and stalls for time.

Please stand up to him and get this resolved or start taxing him for a 50-plus unit complex. I regret that it has to come to this, but if the town will not take responsibility for this fiasco, then it will become a very public issue.

Ready to shine in Rio

Danielle Lappage competes in Olympic female wrestling

BY JOSEPH HO
MVP Staff

As she took to the mat, Danielle Lappage flopped, scrambled but refused to yield.

Coach George Grant had instructed his wrestlers in practice that day to pin each other. Danielle was in Grade 8. Her male opponent, in Grade 11, was bigger, stronger, and could toss her around and score points that would have counted in a real match. But he couldn't demonstrate control and put both her shoulders on the floor. So he tried telling her to give up.

"And she goes, 'I'm not going to lose to you. Or anybody here,'" Grant says, cadence slow, tone severe. He couldn't help being taken aback by the statement. "It was with such conviction that she wasn't going to get pinned."

In Grant's memory, that was the first time he knew there was something special about this small town girl.

Two months after the biggest victory of her career, Danielle is home, on a sunny day in February with a chinook wind blowing through. She's just finished a workout at the Community Learning Campus gym.

Danielle, 25, was introduced to wrestling in middle school. She was like most other kids just trying the sport out. Practices were fun, nothing too intense. It was all about playing, laughing and spending time with friends. Those were the reasons she kept coming back.

"It was just a lunchtime thing. I wasn't really that serious about it. I was always pretty good at wrestling because I was strong and I was in swimming and gymnastics before," Danielle says.

The Lappage family home says more about Danielle's early years. In the basement, her mom Val thumbs through scrapbooks containing photos, theatre programs, news clippings and ribbons chronicling the lives of her four children.

Danielle, Val's second-oldest, was a natural athlete. In addition to swimming and gymnastics, she played volleyball, rugby and basketball, excelling at them all. The trophies and medals in her home come from multiple sports.

She always liked winning — and as her parents recall, could not stand to lose. As a child, Danielle would hide in her room until the sting of finishing anywhere but first wore off.

While Val relives the memories, Danielle's father Bob stands watching.

"Holy crap, everything. Tests in school — she was second in the class and didn't like it because some guy beat her," Bob says.

The parents say they knew their daughter would become a high achiever because of her competitive drive. Where that came from is a mystery.

"It comes from just being her, I guess. We try to figure that out all the time," Val says. "Everything had to be perfect. I knew she would become something big because that's the way she was her whole life."

When Danielle made her first appearance at the national wrestling championship in Grade 9, the results were not good enough. She finished seventh.

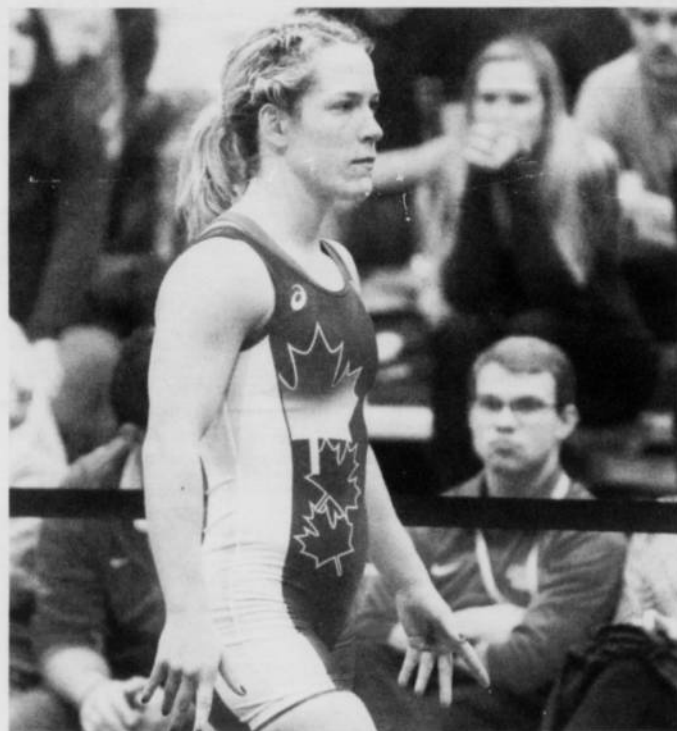

After a six-month season, coach Grant says she was heartbroken having fallen so short.

"(But) in the following year, she just really filled in the missing pieces of the puzzle," he says.

Enter Clive Llewellyn, former Olympian and national champion. In 1976, he wrestled for Canada at the Montreal Olympics. He also qualified for the boycotted Moscow Games. Today, he heads a Calgary law practice and serves as a director for Wrestling Canada.

Llewellyn, then coaching at his own club, met Danielle in Grade 10 at one of the many tournaments during the high school season. He asked Grant if he'd mind letting him train her. No problem.

"I said, 'most definitely.' I'm taking her as far as I can get her, but she needs more coaching. She needs better coaching — and that's what he provided, that little extra on top," Grant says.

Grant never hesitated to let somebody else coach his rising star. There wasn't a chance he'd turn down an offer from someone with Llewellyn's expertise.

"There are a lot of coaches who are too protective of their self-image. George has always been willing to say, 'I didn't know that, go ask him.' And that's what makes him a top-level coach and I mean that," Llewellyn says.

That year turned out to be pivotal for Danielle. She started taking wrestling seriously. Val drove her down Highway 2 multiple nights each week to train in Calgary, waiting in the car until she finished. The mornings after, Danielle would wake up for Grant's 6:30 a.m. practices at Olds High School.

"Not once did she balk at it and say, 'this is too tough, I need some time off,'" Grant says. "It seemed like the more busy she was, the more focused she became."

With Llewellyn in her ear, Danielle learned to dream big, dream that she could become a national champion.

"If other people said that to you but they don't have the wrestling medals and the wrestling successes to back up what they're saying, I appreciate that — but it's hard to believe what they're saying," she says.

"He said that to me so I believed him. And I think that made me believe in myself, hearing somebody with such high achievements in the sport believe in me."

In 2006, she became a Cadet national champion. She might have been a multi-sport athlete throughout high school, but wrestling became her primary one. The next year, she won bronze at the Juvenile nationals.

Danielle's senior year in 2008 was special for Grant's Spartans team. At the national championship in Saskatoon, she was one of only three girls representing Olds. Against clubs with far bigger women's rosters, she, Hayley Smith, and Jen Wickwire scored enough points to finish fourth overall in the country, with Danielle winning gold.

"I think that's what hooked me, seeing that I could be successful, not just on a provincial scale but on a national one and dreams grew from there, I guess," Danielle says.

Calgary seemed like the obvious choice after high school. The Dinos had one of the top women's wrestling programs in the country, with the added benefit of being close to home. Instead, on Lewellyn's advice, Danielle picked the Simon Fraser University Clan and majored in criminology.

"He just wanted me to know that I wasn't confined to that choice, to the Calgary choice. We had a tournament in Vancouver in my Grade 12 year and he arranged for us to go to breakfast with (SFU coach) Mike Jones and that's how that started," she says.

Jones described her as the ideal recruit: driven, a good athlete and an honour roll student in high school, strong academically as well — the perfect fit.

"You never know if they can take the training load that you're going to put them through, or how they're going to react to a new school or situation. But she was almost instantly assimilated into it," he says.

Going to SFU gave Danielle international experience. The Clan competed in the Women's College Wrestling Association, a U.S. league. In 2012, the school became the first non-U.S. member in the NCAA Division II.

"I think it helped me out a lot because in Canada, there's only so many women wrestlers. So instead of wrestling the same women over and over again, it allowed me to wrestle a lot of different people," she says.

She found success at the next level, winning collegiate, national and international championships.

After graduating in 2013, Danielle stayed at SFU, pursuing her master's degree in criminology. She continued to wrestle with the Burnaby Mountain Wrestling Club. She earned a spot on Canada's Senior National Team in 2014 when she defeated Wetaskiwin native Justine Bouchard at the trials competition.

Bouchard was both Danielle's hero and nemesis. Four years older, Bouchard was a gold medalist at the 2010 Commonwealth Games. She also beat Danielle more times than any other opponent, dating back to their high school years.

"I wanted to be in her spot. I wanted to be the provincial champ. I wanted to be the national champ. I wanted to be the senior national champ. She was someone I was always chasing, to catch up with all through my varsity career," Danielle says.

More victories followed in 2014, with gold medals at the World University Games and Commonwealth Games.

Then a devastating setback. Danielle tore the ACL in her right knee in practice that October.

"People either don't come back from it or they come back and they're worse, they're slower, always hesitant about their knee," she says.

She missed the senior national championship and the 2015 Pan Am Games while recovering from knee surgery. During that time, Ontario's Braxton Stone-Papadopoulos, only 20 years old, won both competitions in Danielle's 63-kilogram weight class. The Scarborough, Ont. wrestler then earned Canada an Olympic berth while at the World Championships.

Danielle spent more than a year getting into the best shape possible, starting with jogging, then grappling above the waist, wrestling with lighter partners before working up to her own weight class without restrictions.

There were moments of doubt. Recovering from an ACL injury has always been as mental as it is physical. Danielle credits a strong support network that believed she would return to form, even when she didn't.

Last December, 14 months after her injury, she entered the tournament that decided who would represent Canada in Rio de Janeiro as an unranked wrestler. She breezed through the competition, winning six straight matches, two of them against Stone-Papadopoulos, the No.1 seed.

Today, everywhere you go, people are talking about her. At the schools she attended, town council, community events, and for one reason: Danielle became the first person from Olds to qualify for the Olympic Games.

Is Danielle Lappage one of the greatest hometown athletes this town has ever produced?

Everyone who loves Linda is glad she got a mammogram. Because her breast cancer was found early, she is alive and well today.

Women aged 50 to 74 should plan to have a screening mammogram every 2 years, and can self-refer.

Women 40-49 may be screened annually with a referral for their first mammogram.

Considering her previous international success, and now the chance to represent Canada on the world's biggest stage, George Grant, who has taught at Olds High School for 20 years, certainly thinks so.

"She definitely takes a spot up there. She would be one of the most successful athletes that have come out of Olds. But comparing different sports is so difficult to do. In wrestling, there's so few competitors so it makes it tougher in some regards to get good competition, to get good training," he says.

"I fully expect Danielle will eventually end up in the British Columbia Sports Hall of Fame and possibly the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame and even in Calgary at the Olympic Sports Hall of Fame."

But what to do about it here? Town hall has wondered the same thing, at one point proposing to erect low walls in Centennial Park where commemorative ornaments could be hung. That portion of the park's revitalization plan was on the docket but slashed during budget cuts, an effect of the province's poor economy.

"I think it would be neat to have a wall of fame somewhere, be it at the town office or maybe here at the Ralph Klein Centre," Grant says. "I'm sure there would be a lot of names that would go up there that many people, including myself, have forgotten over the years or didn't know at all."

Despite the heights she's climbing, Danielle keeps coming home. And people notice. They stop and greet her, congratulate her, take pictures with her. Strangers who come asking for her autograph haven't turned her into that one friend everybody has, the one you grow up with who tastes success and is then suddenly too busy, too important to call or visit.

Sure, her family is here. That's the obvious reason. But there are more. She names Tedd Charbonneau, owner of Tedds Food Mart, the convenience store and gas bar she worked at since she was 13 years old until moving away. He was like a second dad to her, she says.

Off the top of her head, Danielle also lists teachers, friends, everybody she tries to catch up with when she can.

"It's the best little town there is. And it's funny because ... on the national team and the university team, everybody knows me as Danielle, she's from Olds," she says.

"I feel so lucky because the other girls on the team ... don't have that support, that recognition that I'm getting because I'm from Olds. And they all know that and (talk) all the time about how cool it is."

In Llewellyn's mind, coming from a small town is also an advantage, where neighbours rally behind you, cheer for you, and local media covers your achievements.

"If Danielle was in Calgary, nobody knows it," he says. "No, most top-level athletes come out of small towns, like Olds."

Now the toughest part; seizing the moment while her window of opportunity is open. Where she's going, only a select few of her friends and family can follow. And above all, the clock is running. Danielle won't be a wrestler forever.

In the face of it, she remains optimistic.

"It's incredible, the support I'm getting from this town. But it's going to be a hard, hard tournament and I honestly do think I can do well and I think I can bring home a medal," she says.

"If they know I'm doing everything I can do, I'm putting everything I can into it, hopefully they'll be proud; medal or no medal."

There's no quit in that small town girl. Once just trying to keep her back off the mat, now a woman driven to make her home proud. Once scrawny, now strong. But still believing. And fighting.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

REGULAR TOWN COUNCIL MEETING: Council will not be meeting in August

MUNICIPAL PLANNING COMMISSION MEETING: Wednesday August 10, 2016 at 4:30 pm

Unless otherwise noted, all meetings are held in Council Chambers at the Town Office.

Didsbury Citizen Survey 2016

The Town of Didsbury is excited to be embarking on a ten year strategic plan process that needs your input! Over the next month, the Town will be searching for your thoughts on how to make our community even better over the next ten years. For those that were unable to attend the two open houses that were held, we have a short survey to provide you with an opportunity to shape the future of Didsbury.

Please visit our website at www.didsbury.ca to take the short survey and enter for your chance to win a Beats Pill Bluetooth speaker as a prize for completing the survey. Please remember to include your name and contact information to be included for the prize draw. If you do not wish to participate in the collection of a prize you may remain anonymous.

The survey runs until August 8 pm on August 14, 2016.

Didsbury Aquatic Centre Shutdown

A planned shutdown will occur at the Aquatic Centre beginning August 12, 2016. During this time, the final phase of the Aquatic Centre upgrades will occur, seeing the interior steel beam ceiling surface sandblasted, repaired and re-coated. We apologize in advance for this disruption of service but are excited to complete this three-year project, ensuring the pool remains a viable facility in Didsbury for many years to come. For further information, please call 335.7369.

Thank you for your patience

Protecting Alberta Lands

Tickets for public land offences will range from $100 to $500.

Alberta is known for its vast, beautiful land – and it's important we take the steps to protect it.

Starting August 6, 2016, tickets with specified fine penalties can be issued on the spot for irresponsible off-highway vehicle use, damage and destruction to fish or wildlife habitat and inappropriate waste disposal.

These tickets are another tool for enforcement personnel, who may also issue written warnings, require the person(s) responsible to repair any damage they caused or compel the person(s) responsible to appear in court.

Anyone who witnesses serious public lands abuse can phone the 24-hour Report A Poacher line at 1-800-642-3800.
